ASM17360 Block schematics

ASM11370 uses BLE to share button events to connected target, e.g.

ASM11374. Main system blocks:

- 3V CR2450 Cell Battery
- Microcontroller nRF52832 with ARM Cortex M4 CPU, 512kB flash and 64kB RAM memory
- 3 Buttons which individual status, e.g. press, release, etc, are exposed via BLE
- Communication during production test is done via Universal asynchronous receiver transmitter interface (UART)
- Programming is done via Serial Wire Debug Interface (SWD)
- Internal DC DC converter supplies microcontroller with 1.3 V to make it more energy efficient
- RF Tuning at 50 Ohm before and after Bluetooth Band Pass filter that feeds the signal into a 2.4 GHz Antenna
- The Antenna type is Bended monopole
- The Antenna Gain is 0.5dBi (includes a saw filter with 2dBi)

The software is written in C and based on Nordic Semiconductor's Software Development Kit labeled nRF5 SDK v15.3.0. The software consists of three parts:

- Bootloader used for upgrades
- Softdevice used for BLE radio parts
 - the softdevice is not modified, it's provided as a binary from chipset supplier Nordic Semiconductor
- Application used for the specific functionality.

When a connection is established via BLE to the ASM17360 unit, it routes push button presses via BLE. The source code, SDK and scripts are stored in a Git repository.
