

A black and white photograph of a Pioneer hi-fi stereo component, likely a tuner or amplifier, showing its front panel. The unit is rectangular with a light-colored faceplate. At the top is a large, horizontal rectangular display window. Below this, the front panel features several controls: a large circular knob on the left, a small rectangular slider or switch in the center, a small rectangular button or indicator to the right of the slider, a small circular indicator or button further right, and a larger rectangular button or slider on the far right. The Pioneer logo is visible on the left side of the faceplate.
