Operational Description.

The Sennheiser Wireless Microphone is a belt clip worn device for transmitting voice to a separate studio. The system uses a PLL/VCO for generating the output carrier frequency with frequency determined from an EEPROM with stored frequency data. Audio modulation from the input microphone is coupled to an amplifier, compander, and limiter system before coupling to the FM modulator.